Environmental factors play an important part in plant growth. The height and flowering months given in this Catalogue are approximate. Please note when planting, it is important you do not plant in dry spots where bulbs and plants are sheltered and will receive little or no rainwater. Plants and bulbs do not like heavy waterlogged soil, increase drainage by adding grit. A dressing of potash when the stems are around 12cms in height every couple of weeks will improve flower production. This can be stopped once the flower starts to fade.

Getting the most out of your autumn flowering crocus:

If the weather is very dry in autumn provide additional water, you can cover the corms after flowering with light mulch to help seal in moisture and protect from severe winter weather. If your soil is poor add organic matter and grit to aid drainage and, ideally, apply a winter mulch from late November/December. Feed with a high potash fertiliser such as organic liquid seaweed.

Prior to planting Eremurus, gently soak crowns for around two hours, taking care when handling their brittle roots. Plant in full sun in a humus rich, sandy, free-draining soil — if a little heavy, make sure to add grit to aid drainage as eremuri will fail to grow if the ground is too heavy. Dig a hole wider than the roots — around 20 cm deep — before building a mound of earth in the centre and placing your crown on top so it can sit just below the surface. Cover the whole root with soil and take care not to damage the tubers. Mark the position of planting and give them plenty of space — 40 to 60 cm — to avoid any damage to the roots whilst weeding. Feed every couple of weeks with high potash feed. If you garden organically liquid seaweed is ideal as it is organic and comes from a sustainable source

Please see images on the website of this specie, the leaves are also larger than the traditional English variety.

Please note this is not the Spanish Bluebell but a specie.
